entitled Rock Lyrics Are Poetry (Maybe) from 1967 (revised 1968), predating The Poetry of Rock itself, acknowledges these contradictions and highlights one of the most useful ideas in later writing on song words (Frith 1988; Griffiths 2003).

The poetry of rock: song lyrics are not poems but the

The Fire - When a human is asked about a particular fire, she comes close: then it is too hot, so she turns her face away and that's when the forest of her bearable life appears, always on the other side of the fire. The fire she's been asked to tell the story of, she has to turn from it, so the story you hear is that of pines and twitching leaves and how her body is like neither all the while ...
